If you're hoping to bet on the Super Bowl online from your couch in Florida, you're out of luck.

Despite a compact between the Seminole Tribe and Gov.

An appeals court heard arguments in December, and everyone is now awaiting a ruling.

To get around a 2018 voter-approved amendment that only authorized gambling in the state if it was approved by voters, the servers for the sports betting were supposed to be located on tribal land.

"If you are remotely tempted to accept their argument, I beg you, make it crystal clear that your order says this secretary's approval does not in any way authorize the gambling that takes place off Indian land," said attorney Hamish Hume.

At the time, he had a bleak outlook on the chances of sports betting coming to Florida.
