Momentum had appeared to be building behind this year's effort, after Republican Gov.

Rules allow Georgia lawmakers to completely change a bill.

Mike Dugan, a Carrollton Republican, said the move "just set sports betting back five years"

Gov.

House Speaker Jon Burns said last week that the issue might not be dead for the year.

Sports betting would be administered by the Georgia Lottery Corp.

The plan would license 16 sports books, each offering bets online to people 21 and older and physically present in the state.
