All of these activities use a lot of data so it might be best to change plans to one with a higher data cap and download speed.

You could also disconnect any devices that connect to the internet and eat up bandwidth.

Another step you could take is to use a hardwire connection, it will give you quicker speeds since it will be a direct connection to the router.

It won't be the most convenient way to play, but it will give you better speeds.

If you can't use a wired connection then get as close to the router as you can, this will allow other objects to not get in the way of the signal.

One last option is to check to see how old your router is.

If it is over five years old then you might want to consider an upgrade, there are routers that specifically handle the best internet speeds for gaming.

If lag is a big issue then an upgrade would be worth it.

Law makers couldn't have foreseen the way that gambling would develop online 17 years on.

Work is underway to develop a safe, regulated online gambling system for New Zealand that keeps people safe, allows only trusted providers to participate in the market, and contributes to the community.
