The Amazon Vine program is an invite-only elite group of Amazon reviewers known as "Vine Voices" who receive products from Amazon sellers for free in exchange for their reviews. Usually, Vine reviewers receive products to submit their unbiased feedback when products are newly released. Sellers will list their products for Vine Voices to help a listing gain traction with reviews.

Before Amazon Vine was enabled for all Amazon sellers, it's no secret that sellers solicited and created an underground system of incentivized reviews. New products launched 10 days could rack up thousands of reviews, all positive 5 stars, and the reviewers got the product for free and many sellers offered another $20 via PayPal to the reviewer as a bonus.

The essence of Amazon Vine is to generate real reviews to enable potential customers to make the best buying decision possible. Generating real reviews or helpful and insightful reviews can be overwhelming for a new seller that does not know how the Amazon marketplace works. But with Amazon Vine Voices, you can send your products to reviewers to give their feedback before listing the products on Amazon. The truth is that every buyer on Amazon wants to buy a product that has at least 4 or 5-star reviews, and this is what the Vine program offers sellers.

How do you get an invite to become an Amazon Vine reviewer?

Your interest in the products enrolled is a key factor to get an invite from Amazon. There is no real way to determine whether a product has been enrolled or not, aside from looking for Vine reviews on Amazon. In all honesty, this is usually not an easy task to embark on. All I know is that vendors pay to have their products included in the program — this is a fact that Amazon never discloses; thus, leading to some negative coverage of the program in the past.
