Temu is the top app in the Google Play and Apple App stores, ahead of TikTok, Instagram, and Amazon.

Prices are so low that some shoppers wonder if it's a scam, but people who tried it says it works.

Similar to Amazon, it sells a vast array of items ranging from fast fashion and makeup to electronics, homeware, and even bongos on both its website and app. It operates exclusively as a marketplace where sellers who are predominantly based in China sell goods to customers in the US and Canada.

"The idea is you can just keep running your credit card because your budget can afford it," Michael Felice, associate partner in the communications, media, and technology practice of consulting firm Kearney, told Insider.

If orders are running late, it says it will give customers a small store credit, and free returns are available within 90 days of ordering.

But given that Americans are accustomed to Amazon's same-day or next-day delivery service and free returns, it could be a challenge for Temu to compete, Felice said.
