The Gambler's Z helps you answer questions 2 and 3, because the question we're really asking is what the statistical Z-test asks: Would a coin flip trial that resulted in 23 heads and 7 tails be inconsistent with a fair coin that had a 50-50 chance of landing on heads and tails?

Say we wanted to test that antibiotic from the last paragraph: We'd take a bunch of petri dishes full of bacteria, apply the antibiotic to some of them, and then apply chocolate milk or something to the others, and count the bacterial cells.

The square root of 7.

So,  $\sqrt{23 - 15} = 8$ .
